

Healing Through Horses

Chapter One

There were four horses who lived in Heaven. One day, they were sitting around the stable and having a meeting. These four horses were different in color. One was blue, one was black, one was brownish red and one was white. They were very good friends. Two were girls and two were boys.

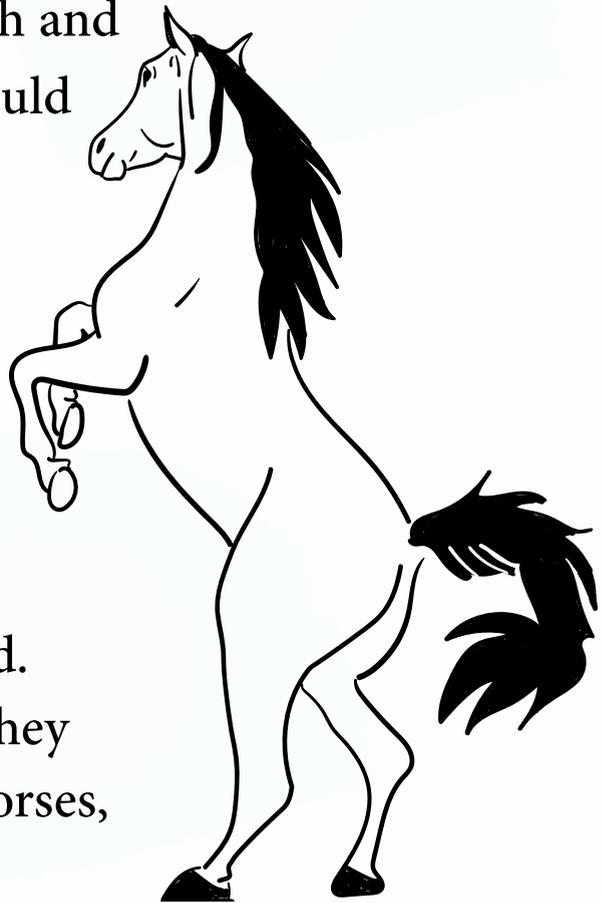

The white horse was a girl and her name was White Cloud.
The black horse was a boy and his name was Black Bird.
The red horse was a girl and her name was Red Robin.
The blue horse was a boy and his name was Blue Sky.

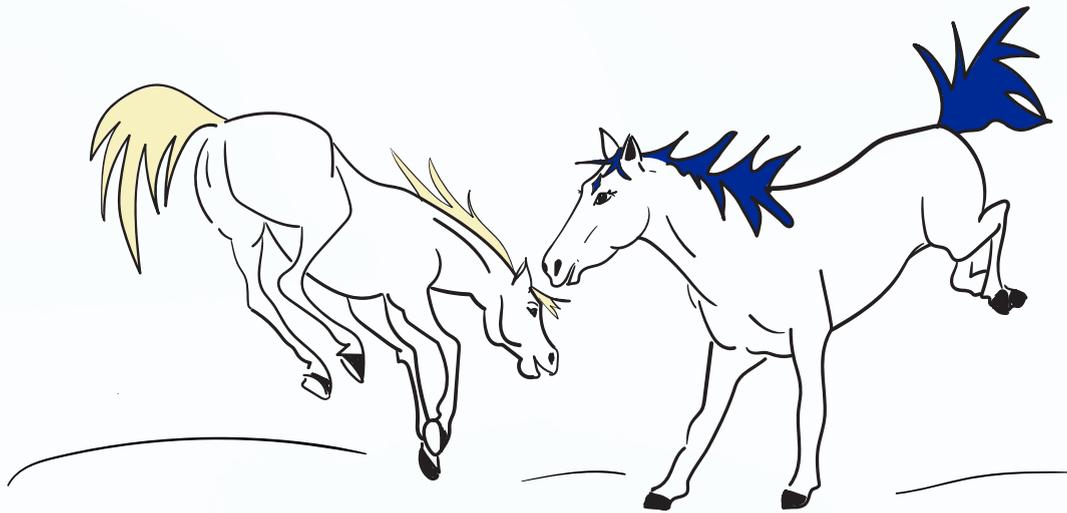

From high above, they would always watch what was going on in the world, just like watching T.V. What they saw made them sad and unhappy. When discussing this with each other, White Cloud said: “why don’t we go down there to planet Earth and bring presents that maybe could make a difference?”

Black Bird was the first to rear up and answered: “oh yes, let’s go. It is better than sitting here and feeling sad.”

Red Robin was a little afraid. She asked: “well what if they reject us, because we are horses, not humans?”

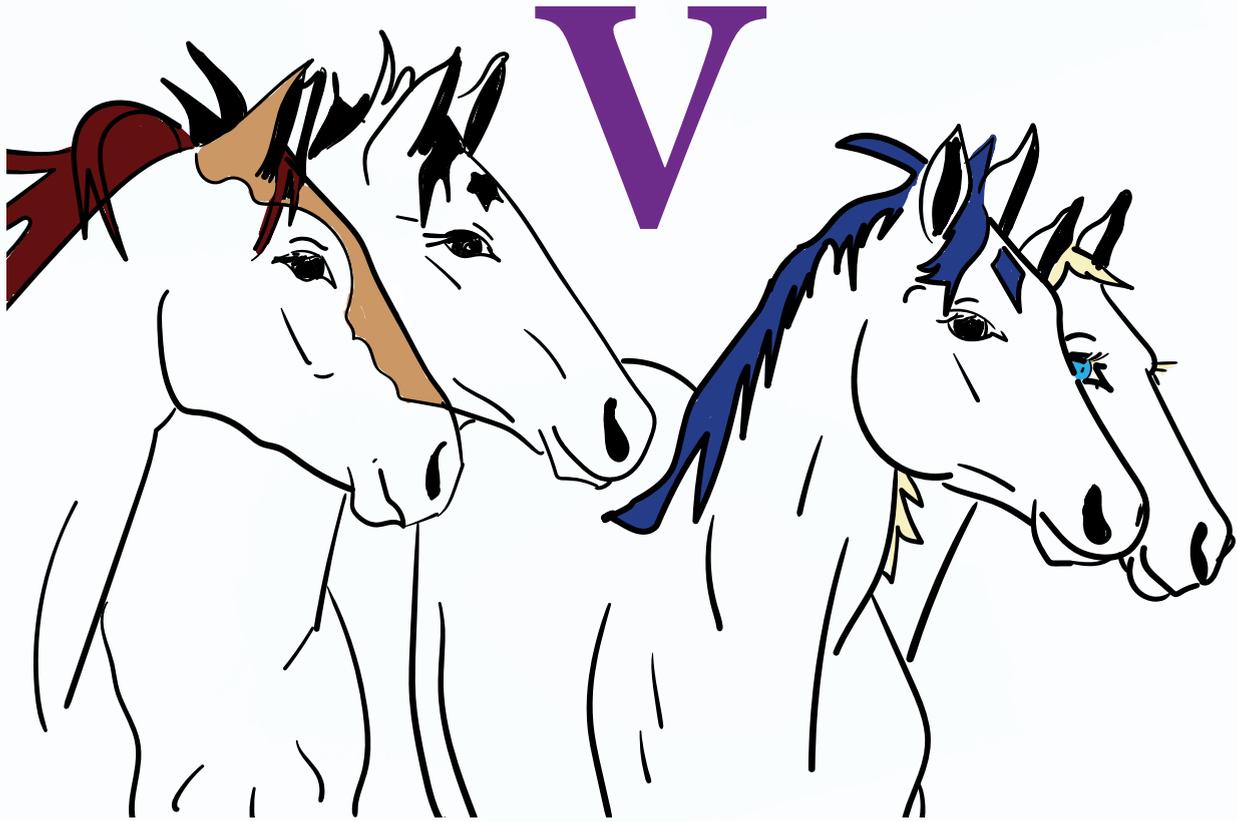

Blue Sky, who was the feistiest of them all, jumped up and answered: “who cares – we just need to do what we think is right and not worry what people think of us.” Then they all whinnied and raised their tails in agreement.

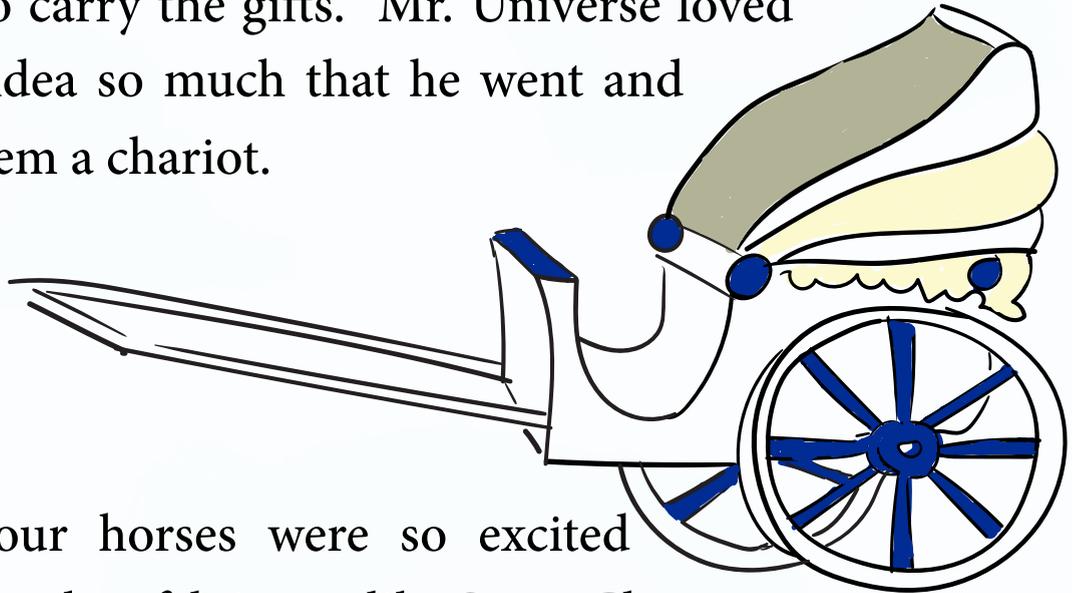

They reared up and agreed to make their journey in one week's time. They felt they needed to get prepared with the gifts that they were each going to bring. They set a date to meet again in four days and go over what they would bring and how they would help the Earth's children.

Chapter Two

When they met again in 4 days, they all trotted in, feeling very excited. They had given much thought to what they could bring down to Earth. They decided to call their plan Project Victory.

The first thing they talked about was how they would travel down to Earth from Heaven. It was told to them by their teacher, Mr. Universe, that they should get a chariot and the chariot would help them take the trip safely, plus be able to carry the gifts. Mr. Universe loved their idea so much that he went and got them a chariot.

The four horses were so excited because they felt it was like Santa Claus and his sleigh bringing presents for Christmas, but instead of reindeers, it would be horses. And instead of a sleigh, they would be pulling a chariot bringing 'forever gifts'.

Red Robin said: “I want to bring peace to the children. I feel very badly that they live in a place with so much anger, war and frustration. It does not seem fair that we live here, in such a beautiful and peaceful place. So I am going to bring a peace heart, with all different languages to give out to each child. Let them hang it in their room over their beds, so they can dream of peace every night. The more they are reminded of peace, and to live through their hearts, the better chance there will be an end to fighting and quarreling. And they will be reminded that peace begins with each one of them.

I have decided that the peace heart will stand for COMPASSION.”

White Cloud said: “I want to bring kindness and gentleness to the children. So I created a beautiful white and brown feather with beads. This feather will help them in time of harshness, fierce competition and cruelty. Every time something or someone is unkind, they can see their beautiful white and brown feather as a reminder that they have a friend to call upon to soothe them. Or if they feel very angry about something or someone, they just need to pick up their white feather and it will calm their challenging and difficult feelings.

I have decided that my white and brown feather will stand for COOPERATION.”

Black Bird said: “I want to bring positivity to the children. I hear about the negative thinking, words, games and news down there. I want them to have something to feel positive about. So I am going to bring a sword of positive energy and the ability to stay focused on positivity. Then every time they hear or see something negative, they can cut it away with their sword. It will be an invisible sword that they will keep in their minds, so no one can ever take it away from them. I will make a picture of it for them to have in their room, to always remind them of what to do. I have decided that my sword will stand for COURAGE.”

Blue Sky said: “I want to bring them the stars. I feel so sad that we know much about them and their lives, but they do not know enough about us and our lives. So, I am going to bring them stars, which will remind them that in times of trouble, to just look up at the stars. It will help them to realize that they are not alone and we are here watching over them and trying to help them. They need to know that everyone has someone who is considered their North Star. And this North Star is there to lead the way for them. I have decided that my stars will stand for CONNECTION.”

Ok so let's go over this and make sure it is right. Red Robin placed her peace heart on the table, calling it compassion. White Cloud placed her feather on the table, calling it cooperation. Black Bird placed his sword on the table, calling it courage, and Blue Sky placed his stars on the table, calling it connection. They all started to rear up and jump in happiness and excitement. They agreed to load up their chariot and leave in three days.

Project Victory was on its way from the galactic Heaven to Earth to bring the children the power of:

Compassion

Cooperation

Courage

Connection

Chapter Three

Everyone from all the galaxies and Heaven came to bid them farewell. There was just so much joy and excitement that the four horses were going to help the Earth children. All Heavenly beings felt they were a part of this great Project Victory.

The horses, with the help of their teacher Mr. Universe, mapped out their route and decided to land first in the areas where children were suffering the most. They wanted to be able to cover the whole globe, so they knew that they would have to go back and forth to retrieve more feathers, swords, peace flags and stars. They also knew that they should concentrate on visiting schools, because more children would be gathered there.

They broke their trip up into the seven continents that make up the planet Earth - Africa, Asia, Australia, Antarctica, South America, North America, and last would be Europe.

Feeling ever so excited and enthusiastic for Project Victory, it was time to gallop down to Earth and get going to Africa and the children.

Africa

They did not know what to expect, and were happy when they landed safely in Africa. Oh my, how the children were excited when they saw the four horses coming down from the sky.

The horses were surprised and felt sorry that so many children did not have enough water to drink, but White Cloud had an answer to that. She gathered her cloud friends and made tons of rain. Then she taught the children how to build rain catchment systems. White Cloud explained that when one inch of rain falls on a 1,000 square foot roof, it collects 600 gallons of pure water.

What can be better than pure water coming from the sky to drink from and even grow a garden!

Oh, she sighed and whinnied, this trip is so much better than I thought it would be. After giving out as many gifts, and helping to build as many rain catchment systems as they could, they knew it was time to move on. They had given the children enough ideas as to how to better take care of themselves.

Feeling sad about leaving the African children, but committed to Project Victory, it was time to journey on to Asia.

Asia

Again, the Asian children were overwhelmed when they saw the four different colored horses arriving...what jubilee!!!!!! In Asia, the horses did not expect to see so many beautiful temples. This made them very happy, but again they were worried that there were more people who were poor and hungry than they expected. So they galloped around and put on a show to help the children laugh. They were also relieved because they had stuffed their bags with tons of nourishing bars of food to distribute and seeds to help them plant food for themselves. They thought, boy this was a close call. They also took note that the Asian children were very respectful of their elders, just like in Heaven, and this warmed their hearts.

Feeling sad about leaving the Asian children, but committed to Project Victory, it was time to journey on to Australia.

Australia

They were surprised that on Earth, children speak many different languages, so the peace heart made a lot of sense because it had all the languages and a map of the world. Australia, though very beautiful, was certainly different in color to Heaven. So Blue Sky was happy to find out that the people, especially the ancient tribe of Aborigines, paid much attention to the sky, the planets, the galaxies and the stars. He reared and jumped in joy. He wanted the Australian children to know more about the Aborigines and what they believe in. The children listened to Blue Sky in wonder and joy learning more about their people. The four horses left feeling so good that the children learned more about their roots and ancestors.

Feeling sad about leaving the Australian children, but committed to Project Victory it was time to journey on to Antarctica.

Antarctica

The trip from Australia to Antarctica was very, very bumpy. This was because of the weather changes. White Cloud got a little travel sickness but Red Robin was able to help her with some medicine that she was smart enough to bring. They were all shocked to see so much snow and so many glaciers. It was also strange because there were very few children. They guessed that people really did not like the idea of living in such cold weather. But it was so beautifully white and that made White Cloud feel she was home again. So much so, she got a little homesick, but she knew there were many more children to help on the next leg of their trip. Though there were not many humans to help, they still felt blessed to see such a pure part of planet Earth.

Feeling a little empty, yet committed to Project Victory, it was time to journey on to South America.

They were told by their teacher Mr. Universe that going from Antarctica to South America would be quite shocking. South America was so vastly different and there would be many, many people and children. As a result, there was much poverty and the children would be in great need of them. So they made their way back to Heaven to fill up their chariot, because they certainly did not want to run out of forever gifts and packages of good nature bars.

South America

When they arrived in South America, they felt overwhelmed to see so many children. It did not seem fair to them that there were so many children who were hungry, that they wished they had brought more food. But the children were overjoyed to know about their home and that there was a place where no one went hungry, nor was anyone sad. It made them realize that they were not alone. All the children said that they would make sure to look up at the sky every night to see Blue Sky or every day to see White Cloud. But the horses made a note to bring more food next time, maybe even two chariots.

Feeling sad about leaving the South American children, but committed to Project Victory, it was time to journey on to North America.

Going from South America to North America was a breeze, literally. North America was filled with many North American Indian tribes and all different nationalities. Again, White Cloud was happy she brought a heart with all the different languages.

North America

The North American children seemed to understand the gifts and were overjoyed that the horses would bring them such precious things. They said they needed these reminders of how to be compassionate, cooperative, courageous, and connected. They explained that their cities were filled with so much fighting, competition, negativity and loneliness, so these gifts would surely help them with all those problems. And the children promised to look up far more often. They said that they felt far less afraid, knowing that they were not alone and that a place of happiness did indeed exist.

Feeling sad about leaving the North American children, but committed to Project Victory, it was time to journey on to Europe.

Europe was their last stop of the trip. The horses were beginning to feel depressed that their trip would soon be over. Though they loved where they lived, they also loved meeting and helping the children. It warmed their heart and souls. They hoped Mr. Universe would let them come and visit every year and they agreed to really try to convince him. If not, they would take their case to his partner, Mrs. Cosmos.

Europe

Europe was so different from every other place. Again, with so many different languages, the peace heart made sense. The places were steeped in history, with so many old buildings. The European children were different. The gift that most pleased them was the sword. We guessed it was because the sword was a great part of their history. We were so excited to learn that Spain could be thanked for the popularity of the horse and even was responsible for bringing them to North America. But we had to do our best not to show how proud we felt. Especially Black Bird. He was so full of himself that Blue Sky had to calm him down and remind him to be humble. He looked like a horse peacock, with feathers instead of a tail.

We were also surprised to find out that the country Russia is partly in Europe and partly in Asia. We were so confused about borders and did not understand them. In Heaven, we are all one. We live in the energy of one for all and all for one. We agreed that humans tend to make things more complicated than they need to be.

Chapter Four

The continent of Europe was a good finale for us. We saw where we originated from on the Earth. However, we left with very heavy hearts. We hoped and prayed that the children of Earth would be more fulfilled from our visit. We wanted them to really know that there are other planets in the sky, watching over them and trying to help.

We tried as hard as we could to show them that peace is certainly possible, kindness is ever so important, positivity is a complete necessity, and connection is always available. We felt really sad about leaving all the Earth's children, yet feeling good that we completed everything we came to do, so we knew it was time to journey home.

We worked hard, we gave much, we received such joy from the children and we grew so much from this experience. Our hearts were bigger, our minds were smarter, our bodies were stronger and our spirits were higher.....all from meeting the children on planet Earth and fulfilling Project Victory.

When we returned to Heaven, we set a table, laying out our four gifts. Mr. Universe and Mrs. Cosmos had been watching us throughout our whole trip and were ever so pleased with our hard work and the end results of that endeavor. They felt the mission name Project Victory surely did apply.

They said, “You became examples of how to be compassionate, cooperative, courageous and connected. You were always compassionate to those less fortunate, you were never competitive or boastful. Even though you did not know where you were going or what you would see, you were so courageous. Last but not least, you certainly let every child know that there are many in Heaven who are always connected to them.

You did your best, you gave your most, your hearts and minds were open, and your intentions were pure. What more can be asked of you? This is what Heaven is all about. If the children of the world receive this message and try to live it, you truly helped to create Heaven on Earth. You lit up the sky with hope – what could be better! We have decided that we will surely let you continue Project Victory and journey to Planet Earth again next year.”

Wow, what could be better? Now that we knew our plan was a hit, it was then that the four of us realized how tired we were. We went to sleep feeling really triumphant, which means Project Victory might live on forever and ever more. It proves that dreams really do come true, you just have to believe enough in them.

With love and blessings from above,

White Cloud, Black Bird, Red Robin and Blue Sky
